SDDS Installation of Officers and Awards Luncheon 2011

The 2011 Second District Dental Society Installation of Officers and Awards Luncheon was held at The Water's Edge in Long Island City, on January 9th, 2010. The day's celebration saw the SDDS officers installed and some SDDS's members presented with their certificates of Life Membership. The installation's attendees were treated to a look back at SDDS's last year's accomplishments by outgoing SDDS President Deborah Pasquale. Also presenting from the podium were ADA President-Elect William Calnon and NYSDA President Robert Doherty. Dr. Steve Gounardes served as the installing officer to swear in the new slate of SDDS officers. Newly installed President Stuart Segelnick addressed those gathered. He spoke of his plans for the coming year and his thanks to those responsible for his involvement in organized dentistry. Dr. Segelnick received two more significant honors that day. Dr. Doherty presented him with the Bernard Tillis Award for outstanding writing in a society journal and NY State Assemblywoman Grace Meng presented him with a New York State proclamation commemorating the special day. The afternoon's festivities culminated with the singing of an original SDDS anthem that was written by Dr. Segelnick!

Membership to Vote:

Revised Constitution and Bylaws

The bylaws of any society, professional or otherwise, should be reviewed and revised periodically. In September 2010, a special subcommittee was formed to examine the current SDDS Constitution and Bylaws and propose a revision. The reasons for the proposed revision were to:

1. Make the bylaws more current and make provision in them to keep them current.
2. Bring them into alignment with recent major changes in the NYSDA bylaws and governance structure.
3. Update outdated concepts and policies.
4. Help SDDS run more efficiently and consciously of cost.

The subcommittee spent considerable time reviewing the bylaws line by line and presented the proposed revision to the Constitution and Bylaws Committee. It unanimously consented to send to the SDDS Board. At its January meeting, the SDDS Board unanimously approved the transmission of these proposed changes to the membership. The vote on the proposed revision will take place at the March General Membership Meeting on Thursday, March 10th.

Research and Scholarship: Communication in an Era of Mistrust

Charles Bertolami, DDS, DMedSc
Dean, NYU College of Dentistry

It won't come as much of a surprise that I think research and scholarship are critical parts of both dental education and dental practice. I say this believing that what's important in practice is the best guide to what needs to be taught. This makes sense because nearly all our students come to dental school aspiring to be practicing dentists. They are excited at the thought that they too can achieve what most in the Second District Dental Society have already accomplished. But a disconnect can develop between academic life and the realities of clinical practice, so I'd like to begin with some principles I think are relevant.

First Principle: Though research and scholarship are closely related, they're not identical. Research is all about generating new knowledge, doing so through valid, transparent, defensible, and widely accepted methodologies aimed at minimizing subjectivity and maximizing objectivity. No matter how fundamental the research, the ultimate intent in the applied biological sciences is to formulate new treatments, cures, and diagnostic methods for introduction into clinical practice. While all good research qualifies as scholarship, not all scholarship qualifies as research. Outstanding teaching, writing, analysis, even the expression of cogent and thoughtful opinion can qualify as scholarship. The dental profession needs both research and scholarship, whether within a university, a continuing education program, or an evidence-based clinical practice.

Second Principle: People bring to their occupation many different gifts—some through discoveries achieved by original research, others by disseminating what is already known through teaching (both inside and outside of universities), or through exceptional technical proficiency in direct clinical care. The important thing, though, is that the motivating driver for researchers, scholars, teachers, and practitioners is exactly the same, helping people through professional expertise.

Third Principle: Dentistry is both a learned profession and a caring profession. These two distinctive elements can't be separated from each other; they are fully and completely integrated for all professionals, whether a teacher, scientist, or clinician.

These principles are foundational to the social contract between the public and a largely self-regulating profession like dentistry. Central to the contract is trust. Whatever our exact role in the profession, the public trusts that we know what we're doing and that our motives are honorable—that is, that we really do care about patients as human beings. Certification, licensure, and advanced degrees like a DDS or DMD go only so far in ensuring such trust, especially if the public can see for itself that professionals don't live up to their part of the bargain. It's all about learnedness contextualized by authentic caring concern—period. I'm reminded continually that dentistry is a business in addition to being a profession. I agree. But the public's trust does not come from our identity as a business; it comes from our identity as a profession. Therefore, dentists walk a fine line between maintaining the public's trust and going broke. Dental practice succeeds in its balancing act between profession and business because of the public's confidence that the dentist genuinely has the patient's interest at heart.

Knowing what we're doing based on unbiased scientific evidence is what the learnedness piece of the equation is all about. It's achieved through an education colored by research, which cultivates in students a taste for complexity, for problems, and for problem solving. Dental schools need to help students acquire this taste. In doing so, they will generate a few scientists; but, more importantly, they will create out of every graduate a man or woman of science, namely, a sophisticated consumer of research. The primary repository of that research is the scientific literature, which the man or woman of science knows exists, can access, finds intelligible, can critique, and can adapt to clinical practice.

Accordingly, the man or woman of science does not rely only on salespeople, continuing education gurus, Google, or Wikipedia, fancy floor displays, or flashy packaging to know what to think. Only by becoming a person of science is there any hope that the practitioner can acquire, evaluate, and assimilate new knowledge adapting to the changes in practice and the profession that the future will inevitably bring. Ideally, the man or woman of science really delivers when it comes to both the knowledge and the caring components of the all-critical trust relationship. But, trust is in short supply, not because of anything unique to the dental profession, but because of broader forces of mistrust within society. The dental profession's sin of omission is not to have noticed.

Yankelovich and Furth have observed that “[m]istrust has replaced trust, and people in positions of leadership can no longer assume that their words or actions will be given the benefit of the doubt.” Such “mistrust extends beyond corporations and their gatekeepers -- accountants, lawyers, and investment bankers -- to the government and the news media, and threatens to spread to the courts, nongovernmental organizations, and institutions of higher learning.” Healthcare practitioners can be added to the list. The title doctor and the letters denominating the degree after your name no longer carry the weight they once did. Astonishingly, professionals do not seem to understand this—acting as if they still enjoyed the unalloyed trust of the public and not realizing the extent to which that trust has eroded. They behave as if they have the benefit of the doubt, not seeing how wary the public has become of the professional classes. Yankelovich and Furth conclude that in awarding the benefit of the doubt to themselves, professionals have become habituated to the notion that everyone believes them to be acting in good faith. Usually they are acting in good faith but—and this is the key point—they are not seen as doing so. Believing you have the trust of others when you don't is a big mistake. For one thing, it prevents you from doing all the things you would do if you were conscious of the need to build trust.

In dentistry the trend of mistrust began with an exposé published by Reader's Digest in 1997, but it continues unabated today as evidenced by a November 30, 2010, article on the front page of The New York Times that expressed doubt over whether dentists know what they're doing when exposing patients to radiation and whether they even care. Add innumerable pieces between 1997 and 2010, including reports of the death of a 12-year old from dental disease in 2007, and perceived resistance of organized dentistry to caring for the underserved, and you have a potential firestorm of mistrust. The media do not depict the dental profession in a very favorable light, as they once did. The impact of the new storyline is what is known as capturing the narrative. At present, when it comes to dentistry, the only good news is no news.

Often, no one has to capture the narrative; we give it away—especially when science is disparaged in favor of anecdote. Professionals can't afford to take this bait because it can eventually descend even further into a glitzy, Las Vegas, Jersey Shore-style narrative. Nobody wants that when talking about your own health or that of your family. At those times we want the best that solid science can offer and we want it delivered by compassionate professionals that genuinely care. Dental schools need to encourage both.

Title: "Oral Manifestations of HPV Infection"

Clinician: Joan A. Phelan, D.D.S.
*Chair, Department of Oral and Maxillofacial Pathology,
New York University College of Dentistry*

Synopsis:

The relationship between human papilloma virus (HPV) infection and cancer of the vaginal cervix in women is well established. Patients frequently ask questions about the significance of HPV as a cause of oral cancer and there are many internet sites that discuss this subject. The role of HPV in the pathogenesis of oral cancer is not as clear as its role in cervical cancer. Studies are being reported that are providing information about HPV infection of the oral mucosa and the role of this virus in the pathogenesis of oral cancer.

This presentation will include an overview of HPV infection, the oral lesions known to be caused by HPV and the results of recent studies that have explored the role of HPV in the pathogenesis of oral cancer. Lecture attendees will:

- Understand the pathogenesis of epithelial infection with HPV
- Be able to list the oral mucosal lesions that are known to be caused by HPV infection
- Become familiar with the results of research studies that are exploring the role of HPV in the pathogenesis of oral cancer

CRESO Corner

By Martin Schnee
In my estimation as a New York State CRESO, about 10% of the existing active dental facilities in New York City are either not registered or have expired registrations. If you are operating in a new office – i.e. if you have opened a new dental practice or taken over an existing dental office – you are required to register 30 days prior to starting. The fines can be $1000 to $2000 or more if you are found to be operating x-ray units without a valid registration.

REGISTERING YOUR X-RAY UNIT

- If you are a new owner follow the steps below:
- 1-Hire a CRESO to perform an initial inspection and also a complete radiation protection survey of each x-ray unit.
  - 2-Complete an application form requesting a new registration. Applications can be obtained from the New York Department of Health and Mental Hygiene.
  - 3-Have proof of Worker’s Compensation insurance for your office (form C-150 is best).

4-Have proof of Disability Insurance for your office (form DB-120.1). The requesting agency will be the NYC Department of Health and Mental Hygiene at 2 Lafayette Street, New York, NY 10007.

NOTE: If you do not have any employees then exemption form CE-200 must be downloaded from the NY Workers Compensation Board site at http://www.wcb.state.ny.us/content/ebiz/wc\_db\_exemptions/requestExemptionOverview.jsp and submitted instead of items 3 and 4 above. This form should be notarized.

Submit the above for review to:

NYC Office of Radiological Health
2 Lafayette Street
New York, NY 10007
(212) 676-1552

You should receive notification of approval after two to three weeks, at which point you will be asked to mail a check for $100 for a two-year registration. If you are an existing owner and have an expired registration or cannot find your registration for verification, follow the steps below:

- 1-Verify that your registration has expired by calling the NYC Department of Consumer Affairs at (212) 487-4060, 65 or 85. Give them your CAMIS # which can be found on your old registration or an old inspection report.
- 2-If your registration has expired, ask them to fax or mail you a renewal application.
- 3-You will need to obtain items 3 and 4 from above or the exemption form CE-200.
- 4-Write a check for $100 or the amount owed to the NYC Department of Health and Mental Hygiene. If you don’t know how much is owed contact the Department of Consumer Affairs to obtain that information.
- 5-Submit the above for review to the NYC Office of Radiological Health (address above) and after 2-3 weeks you should have your new registration. In either situation if you have not heard from the City after three weeks, you should call to inquire about the status of your applications.
