Peer Review Beats the Alternatives

By Drs. Jeffrey Galler and Sari Rosenwein

As practicing dentists, we all strive to produce excellent dentistry and generate large numbers of satisfied patients. Despite our best efforts, every so often we will be faced with a disgruntled patient, and we utilize our very best interpersonal and clinical skills to assuage the situation. Sometimes, unfortunately, regardless of our efforts, a disgratified patient will choose to file a formal complaint. In a recent publication, an author wrote: “Disgruntled patients have access to two methods of having their grievances adjudicated against a dentist: 1) by complaining to the state’s licensing agency (Office of Professional Discipline), or 2) by bringing a suit against the dentist.” That information is incorrect.

New York State, and in many other states, a disgruntled patient’s best choice would be to file a complaint with their local dental society’s Peer Review Committee. Why is this true? Looking at it from the patient’s perspective, what a disgruntled patient usually desires, is to have the complaint taken seriously, have the complaint evaluated fairly, impartially, and expeditiously, and, if justified, have his/her returned. What a dentist usually desires, is to have his work evaluated by unbiased peers and, in the event of an adverse finding, limit his financial liability to only the patient, without any additional liability for pain, suffering, or future corrective dental treatment; and, the dentist would also like the incident to never be recorded in the National Data Bank.

The Peer Review process fulfills all these desires. By contrast, consider the ramifications of an Office of Professional Discipline (OPD) complaint. This is an extremely stressful situation for the dentist. They might be faced with a permanent or temporary loss of the license to practice dentistry in New York State. Although some patients might experience satisfaction in “getting the dentist into trouble,” patients who choose this route do not get their money back from the treating dentist. Similarly, malpractice litigation has many drawbacks for both the patient and the dentist. The case is never resolved quickly. Litigation is often long, protracted, expensive, and stressful to both parties. The dentist is exposed to greater financial liability and the possibility of an adverse report in the National Data Bank. The patient’s perspective, what a dissatisfied patient usually desires, is to have his work diligently, and, if justified, have his/her returned. What a dentist usually desires, is to have his work evaluated by unbiased peers and, in the event of an adverse finding, limit his financial liability to only the patient, without any additional liability for pain, suffering, or future corrective dental treatment; and, the dentist would also like the incident to never be recorded in the National Data Bank.

SDDS Presidents: A History

even what the initials L.E. stand for. It was common in that era to call people by the initials of their first and middle name and that was to effect become their name. This is still practiced in some parts of the United States and other countries. As you know any more information on Dr. Brockway, please email me at eperiodr@aol.com.

Charles D. Cook, M.D. Dr. Charles Delano Cook died of apoplexy on September 5, 1912. He was born 87 years earlier in Harwich, Massachusetts. Dr. C.D. Cook was the 8th President of the SDDS for two terms in 1876 and 1877. He attained his professional education at Castelon College of Medicine in Vermont in 1853 earning an M.D. degree. Sometime between 1853-1855 he settled in Brooklyn as an assistant to Dr. James E. Miller whose office was at the corner of Pacific and Henry Street. As Dr. Miller’s apprentice, he learned the profession. The Baltimore College of Dental Surgery graduated the very first two doctors with a D.D.S. degree in 1841. Prior to that, there was no formal dental education. Dentists became apprentices, learning the profession under the guidance of an established dentist. This route to becoming a dentist and practicing in New York was slowly abolished by amendments to the State law and existing, in some measure, in New York until 1904. Many of the founding members of the DDSNY had no dental degree at all. SDDS Past Presidents Dr. L.S. Straw (2nd & 19th), Dr. A.N. Chapman (6th), Dr. L.E. Brockway (7th) and Dr. Cook all had no formal degree.

It is fascinating to note that Dr. James E. Miller, for whom Dr. Cook first apprenticed, was the fifth dentist to set up practice in Brooklyn. He also was the Treasurer of the first dental society in the Brooklyn area called the Long Island Association of Dental Surgeons (started in the autumn of 1853). This society, that predated the Brooklyn Dental Society, and the SDDS was more for social events than educational/scientific endeavors. They had no president, but a chair that would preside at each meeting. The society lasted two to three years.

In 1899, there was much sickness in New York. Dr. Cook narrowly escaped death. Five years later, at the SDDS Board meeting on March 14, 1904, C.D. Cook was found to be one of the oldest and most honored members of the SDDS. The SDDS made him an honorary member for the rest of his life.

His private office was located at 162 Remsen Street (he had moved from 133 Pacific Street, where he practiced while President of the SDDS). Dr. C.D. Cook was the second President of Brooklyn Dental Society in 1869. And was its first Vice President when it was organized on December 14, 1867. He was also a charter member of the New York Institute of Stomatology, which held some of its meetings in his office.

Dr. C. D. Cook was also one of the original members of the Dental Society of the State of New York. He was first organized on June 30, 1868. At the national level, during the ADA’s 18th Annual Session, C.D. Cook read his rather long report as Chairman of the Committee on Literature. This committee was tasked with describing publications and their relationship to dentistry. Dr. Cook was a member of numerous societies that included the Kings County Medical Society, The National Geographical Society, the Odontological Society of Great Britain and the American Association for the Advancement of Sciences.

2012 Children’s Dental Health Month Poster Contest Winners
Identify risk factors for ONJ
Recognize various clinical presentations and early ONJ lesions

Upon completion of this course, attendees should be able to:

- Understand the rationale for bisphosphonate therapy and describe new bone-sparing medications used for osteoporosis, multiple myeloma and metastatic disease
- Recognize various clinical presentations and early ONJ lesions
- Identify risk factors for ONJ
- Understand and manage common dilemmas related to:
  1. CTX testing
  2. Biopsy
  3. Histopathologic changes
  4. Differential diagnosis (e.g. bone exposure without bisphosphonate therapy)
  5. Antiresorptive drug holidays
  6. Avoiding dental surgery
  7. ONJ that does not respond to conservative therapy
  8. Living with exposed bone
- Understand current research that supports the pathogenesis of ONJ
- Describe innovative management strategies for patients with ONJ or requiring dental treatment

The significance of antiresorptive therapy is most apparent when considering breast cancer is a leading cause of death among women worldwide and 10 million Americans have osteoporosis, which is recognized as one of the major public health problems facing postmenopausal women and aging individuals of both sexes. We can anticipate greater concerns related to oral health and antiresorptive therapy based on reports that characterize the efficacy of these drugs for metastatic disease and osteoporosis, the expanded use of BPs as preventive therapy, the increased life expectancy of patients who use these drugs, impetus for quality of life and recent evidence of osteonecrosis associated with other non-BP antiresorptive medications.

Concerns of ONJ may have a broad health impact. Dilemmas arise because discontinuing BP therapy prior to dental procedures does not prevent or improve ONJ and poor oral hygiene or periodontal disease may not correlate with risk assessment. Patient management is further complicated because recommendations have focused on avoiding dental extractions while other reports suggest that BRONJ may be triggered by infection. Treatment regimens for ONJ are not well established and while non-surgical conservative therapy such as oral rinses, antibiotics, analgesics and discontinuing BP therapy have been suggested, patients may not respond to these approaches.
